BAR MEMBERS PAY TRIBUTE TO MEMBER WHO DIED SUDDENLY

Thirty-Six Attorneys of Bucks County at Special Meeting For Late Harry E. Grim

MEET IN COURT HOUSE

Many Pay Tribute to Attorney Who Was Very Highly Respected

DOYLESTOWN, Nov. 17.—In one of the most impressive memorial services ever held in the history of the Bucks County Bar Association, thirty-six attorneys from every section of Bucks county Thursday took part in the special meeting of the Bar called by President Judge Hiram H. Keller and Judge Calvin S. Boyer, to pay respect to their deceased associate, Harry E. Grim, who died suddenly at his home in Perkasie last Sunday night.

The service was held in the Bucks County Court House, after Court adjourned for that purpose. In the afternoon, members of the Bar attended the funeral of Mr. Grim in St. Stephen's Reformed Church, Perkasie.

The untimely death of Harry E. Grim brought forth numerous testimonials of his real service in his profession. Members of the Bar unanimously agree that their association has lost one of its most able, popular, useful and capable members.

An appropriate resolution of respect was directed to be spread upon the Court records and to be sent to the family of the deceased.

It was resolved that fellow members of the Bar express their appreciation of Mr. Grim as a lawyer of high order and ability, who had "conscientious regard for his professional obligations and who was a most careful and conservative counselor, industrious and thorough in his practice, and who acquired to a remarkable degree, the confidence of the Court, the Bar, his clients and his fellow-citizens."

As an associate, the resolution pointed out, Mr. Grim was always modest, genial and considerate of his colleagues which earned for him their abiding friendship and regard. Mr. Grim's reputation as a lawyer extended throughout the Commonwealth. He was held in high esteem by all the citizens of Bucks county and especially in the community in which he lived. He was at one time the candidate for Congressman-at-large for the Commonwealth.

The committee on resolutions appointed by Judge Keller included Henry A. James, Doylestown; Mark Thatcher, Perkasie; Thomas Ross, Doylestown; Howard I. James, Bristol; Charles H. Orrt, Quakertown; and Isaac J. Vanartsdalen, Doylestown.

During the memorial service at the Court House, fitting remarks were made by Judge Keller, in opening the meeting. The Jurist mentioned particularly his fondness for Mr. Grim over a period of long association. Judge Keller said that he had always very highly respected the ability and companionship of the Perkasie attorney.

Other remarks were made by Judge Calvin S. Boyer, Doylestown; Thomas Ross, Henry A. James, Doylestown; Mark Thatcher, Perkasie; C. William Freed, Quakertown; Howard I. James, Bristol; Stace B. McEntee, George Ross, John L. DuBois, Webster Achey and Isaac J. Vanartsdalen, of Doylestown.

The speakers emphasized at length Mr. Grim's ability as a trial lawyer, his careful preparation of his cases, his eloquence and fair treatment of other members of the Bar. His various broad interests, including his interest in all athletics and his admiration for clean sportsmanship at all times were also mentioned. Another member of the Bar declared that he always admired Mr. Grim as a fellow-member, but feared him as an opponent.

Following brief service at his late residence in Perkasie, on Thursday afternoon, the funeral was held in St. Stephen's Church in that Borough. Appropriate sermons were preached by the Rev. E. S. Knoll, of Schuylkill Haven, a former pastor of St. Stephen's Church, and by Rev. Howard Obbold, pastor of the church at the present time. Interment was made in Perkasie mausoleum.

Pall-bearers at the funeral included Albert C. Reutter, assistant Superintendent of Schools of Bucks county; Curwen Lutz, Enos Wampole, Tobias Crouthamel, Dr. K. P. Erwin and Oscar Myers, all of Perkasie.

The honorary pall-bearers included Judges Hiram H. Keller and Calvin S. Boyer, Doylestown; Mahlon Keller, Perkasie; Charles M. Cressman, Quakertown; Assemblyman Wilson L. Yeakel, Perkasie, and Harry Neamand, Perkasie.

Mr. Grim practiced his profession in Bucks County from 1895 until the time of his death.

TO STUDY LOCAL HISTORY IN BUCKS CO. SCHOOLS

Will Be Issued at First in An Installment Form To The Schools

DIRECTORS IN SESSION

DOYLESTOWN, Nov. 17.—With more than 100 school directors in attendance, the Fall meeting of the Bucks County School Directors' Association began at 10 o'clock yesterday morning in the Court House, here. Horace E. Thorn, Lower Makefield, the president, was in charge. Rev. G. W. Spotts, of Telford, pronounced the invocation.

Speaking briefly on school history, Superintendent J. Harry Hoffman explained that men like Dr. J. B. Carrell, of Hathboro, and Dr. B. F. Fackenthal, of Riegelsville, are working on local histories which will be issued in installment forms. The material, dealing with the local histories of districts and townships, will not appear in book form until it is verified. School history and school geography is making progress, Mr. Hoffman said.

As a last resort the County Superintendent's office is taking the responsibility of preparing a history to be used in the schools of Bucks county.

Dr. George R. Cressman, supervising principal of the Doylestown schools, discussed the larger unit of school administration.

"We first began talking about the larger unit in 1913 and now we have come to the point where we have had enough discussions so that we ought to be able to crystallize our discussions on the scheme we want."

"One of the most serious inhibiting factors which keeps us from going ahead is a lack of understanding."

The people in populous suburban areas do not understand the serious conditions the schools face in the coal regions. Any attempt to solve the problem of the larger unit in Pennsylvania must be brought about by sympathy and understanding of the many school districts in the State.

BRISTOL FIRE PLUGS GO MODERNISTIC

(By "The Stroller")

Bristol fire plugs have gone modernistic.

They have become so extremely modern that it is difficult to recognize them as fire plugs.

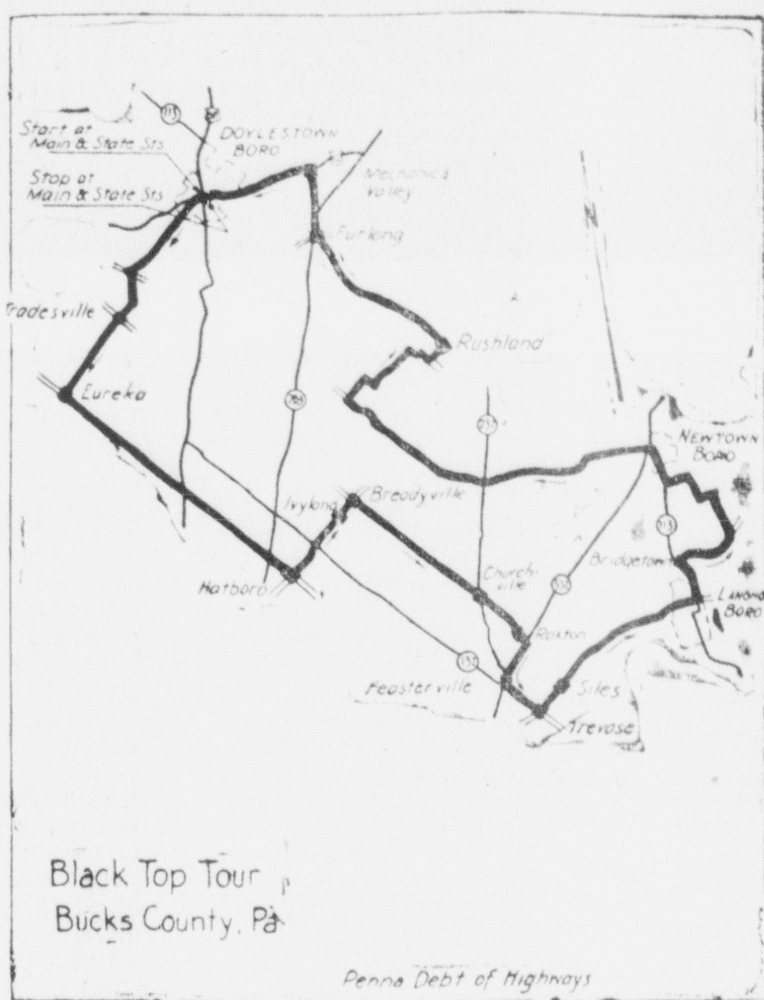

It is all due to the fact that they are being given their annual painting.

Bristol fire plugs for years have been rather sedate in appearance. Painted bright red just as all good fire plugs used to be. But then came a change and like everything else they donned new and more modernistic color scheme with the result that they were painted red with yellow tops.

But this year the old plugs are not at all like they used to be.

They are now being painted aluminum with black bands around the top and the base also painted black.

They are quite nifty looking and are the cause of much admiration among fire plug connoisseurs.

BLACK-TOP TOUR LEADS TO INTERESTING SPOTS

Historic Section of Bucks County is Included in Itinerary

CHART IS PROVIDED

In order to acquaint the public with at least a portion of the 10,000 miles of rural or Pinchot roads on the State Highway System which have undergone construction or reclamation in the last three years, and which make possible a number of delightful neighborhood motor tours, free from traffic congestion, a series of Black Top Tours has been prepared for publication. The total length is calculated to consume a half-day taken in leisurely fashion—a jaunt to places hitherto inaccessible or reached only at the cost of rough and dusty travel.

The loop outlined below may be entered at any point, but allowance must be made in odometer reading to follow the mileage chart. Use of the chart will assist in locating correct turns and points of interest.

An interesting trip through a very historic section of Bucks County may be made by starting at Main and State streets, Doylestown, and proceeding southwesterly along State street to Route 69041 thence past the borough line to the Montgomery County line at Eureka, a distance of 6.2 miles. At the Pine Tree Farm may be seen the oldest house in Bucks County, built in 1730.

At Eureka the tour continues left on Route 69033 to Hallowell, where St. Joseph's Shrine and school are located, crosses U. S. Route 611, passes through Greenbriar at the side of the borough of Hathboro, and across the railroad at Bonair to Route 332.

Thence left along Route 332 past a monument erected by the Bucks and Montgomery County Historical Societies, to commemorate the Battle of Crooked Billet fought during the Revolutionary War, through Ivyland to Route 69034.

SCHOOLS SHOULD MEET NEW NEEDS, HEAD OF STATE SYSTEM BELIEVES

HARRISBURG, Nov. 17.—More than 100 fundamentalists of education, generally known as the three R's of learning, must be included in the modern school program if school children are to be prepared adequately to take over leadership duties of the future, Dr. James N. Rule, superintendent of public instruction, said in an interview today.

In many parts of Pennsylvania the public schools are as efficient and effective as anywhere in the United States, he said, but in other sections the opposite is true. In some areas individuals are found who stress going back to the fundamentals, he added.

"I am in favor of stressing the fundamentals in education," the State Superintendent said, "but I want to define the word 'fundamental.'"

"Are the things that were fundamental in medicine twenty-five years

Blames Church Schools For Few Remaining For Worship

TULLYTOWN, Nov. 17.—The Fall Rally of the fifth district of the Bucks County Sunday School Association was held in the Methodist Church, here, Thursday evening.

Sunday School workers from all over the district filled the edifice, and participated in a business meeting presided over by President James C. Fenimore. Congregational singing was led by Harry Bunting, Bristol.

The program of musical numbers included: Solos, Forsake Me Not, O God, and My Prayer, Mr. Bunting; solos, In the Garden of Tomorrow, and Evening Prayer, John Brehm; vocal numbers, By and By I'll Lay My Burden Down, Sometimes I Feel Like A Motherless Child, Miss Bryant; duet, Somehow, Ruth and Virginia Baehofer.

The Rev. W. H. A. Williams, pastor of Tullytown Church, led in a devotional period. R. Stanley Kendig, of the department of Leadership, Training of the Pennsylvania Sabbath School Association, gave a very practical address on "Building a Better Church School." He said "the low percentage of Church School pupils attending worship services is the fault of the Church School." He indirectly advised that if the Church School is to exist ten years from now, many changes must be made. He advised lengthening of Church School period, enlarging religious education activities into week-day instruction, and training of teachers. Since Mr. Kendig is a specialist in supervision of religious education he was able to give the group an excellent sketch of what supervision can do for the work in the Church School.

The service concluded with calling of the roll; the singing of "God Be With You"; and benediction by the Rev. Henry Richardson, of Mount of Olives Baptist Church, Trenton, N. J.

LEAGUERS HEAR ADDRESS BY SPEAKER FROM DREW

Dr. William M. Gilbert Pleases With His Humor, And Helpful Discourse

RALLY AT YARDLEY

YARDLEY, Nov. 17.—With 150 Leaguers represented by about 150 people, the Bristol Group of Epworth Leaguers conducted its November rally in the Yardley M. E. Church, last evening, with Thomas Chase, Scottsville, presiding.

Dr. William M. Gilbert, of Drew Seminary, Madison, N. J., delivered the address, prefacing his fine discourse with several minutes of humor. Dr. Gilbert was introduced by the Rev. Thomas, pastor of Yardley Church.

In his initial remarks, the speaker likened life to a relay race, with one generation handing the baton to another. He defended his generation from the common remark that said generation had "made a mess of things." He mentioned the increased advantages and improvements noted in each succeeding generation, and told the young people of the splendid heritage handed down to them. "And the thing that gives me tremendous courage in these days is the initiative each has, which helps us to rise above difficulties." Advancement in Christianity was another phase of the talk.

"We have a finer outlook on life today. The old-time religion was based primarily on the hope of heaven and fear of hell, but the motivation for the Christian life today is service." The individual method in molding Christian lives, and in advancing Christianity and civilization, the young folks were informed, is the only true method.

Two officers were chosen last evening, there having been vacancies. These are: Larry Turpin, Bensalem, as fourth vice-president; and Miss Gertrude Zimmerman, Yardley, as third vice-president.

The percentage banner was received by Hulmeville League; and attendance banner by Emile Leaguers, Newtown.

CORONER SWEENEY RAPS AUTO HEADLIGHTS

Says Law Is A Farce and That Drivers at Night Take Life In Own Hands

EXONERATES DRIVER

"The law regulating automobile headlights is a farce," according to Dr. John J. Sweeney, Bucks County Coroner.

Dr. Sweeney took a fling at the automobile headlight law yesterday afternoon, here, when he conducted an inquest into the death of Frederick D. Reuter, 52, Croydon, who was run down by an automobile and fatally injured on the evening of November 10th at about 8:30 o'clock just east of "The Pines," Bristol Pike, in Bristol Township.

"You know what the headlights on automobiles are if you drive at night," said Dr. Sweeney, "and so do I, and everyone else. Your life is in your hands at night and particularly on a rainy night," concluded the coroner.

Dr. Sweeney's comment on the headlight law was made following the testimony of Walter Heinstraw, Bristol Pike, Edgely, who voluntarily testified, and admitted it was his machine which had struck and killed Reuter. Heinstraw told the Coroner's jury that he was driving about 20 miles an hour on the date and at the spot indicated, going in the direction of Trenton. He felt "a bump" on his car and then later discovered that evidently his machine had been the one which struck the man. The lights of an approaching machine blinded Heinstraw so that he could not see the road, he stated.

Heinstraw's testimony was given in a free, open and frank manner and was so commented upon by Coroner Sweeney, who instructed the jury to return a verdict of unavoidable accident.

It was at this point that Coroner Sweeney took to task the headlight law and severely condemned the manner in which headlights are inspected and focused.

The jury was comprised of Dr. Wm. Groff, John Black, Wm. Ewing, Dayton Pegley, James Lynn and Thomas Lawrence.

The jury after a short deliberation, returned a verdict as instructed and Heinstraw was released from custody by Justice of the Peace James F. Guy.

THE NEWSPAPER BOY

The Boy has a natural right to equip himself for the responsibilities of the Man. When he comes to Manhood he must be self-supporting, self-reliant; he must be capable, useful, competent and willing to do his part; he must know enough of the world and of its people to find his part, recognize the parts of others, understand the community of service; in short, he must be able to get along, by himself and with others. Boyhood is an apprenticeship for Manhood.

This is one of the fundamental reasons why the Newspaper Boy is happy and fortunate in his vocation, and why he should be encouraged to develop the opportunities it offers.

The Newspaper Boy is a young merchant. He deals with the public, as does the tradesman. The conditions of success are elemental. He must render good service. He must be dependable. He must be prompt, punctual, attentive to the duty. He must be enterprising, energetic; he finds that his personality counts; success comes in the measure he works for it. He learns to know people, appreciates the fact that they are not all alike, acquires the tact of dealing with folks of varying natures.

Of all the various employments for the boy, Newspaper service fits best in his schedule. It takes but comparatively few hours of his time; it does not interfere with school or studies; it leaves him time for necessary play. It requires attention during its hours, discipline that counts for much in manhood experience. But he is on his own and he pays for his defaults and he gets the reward for his merits.

Boys need experience as well as precept in learning to be men. It is a Boy's right to gain that experience, and, to do that, he must have some measure of responsibility, obligations of self-control, merits and demerits definitely resulting from his own efforts or neglect.

The Newspaper Boy gets this opportunity of experience, learns its lessons, takes its tests, meets its judgment of self-measurement. He is studying, learning, to be a man. And the record of his achievement, in thousands of individual cases, in the general mark-up of industry and enterprise and thrift, and all that makes for effective manhood and good citizenship, is a convincing proof that he goes to a good school.

RIDE 'EM, COWBOY!

It was bound to come to this, and it has. Washington has decided to round up wild horses and have them broken by relief-paid workers for use by destitute farm families.

Wild horses in this country are usually animate fertilizer that hasn't been rendered. They are worthless for work, unsound and unfit and run wild because nobody wants them.

And with hay at $30 a ton, is it cheaper to feed a broken down plug than a destitute family?

Some people can get soft jobs and some aren't even distantly related to a congressman.

Finally there will be two parties: Those who get public money, and those who pay the bill.

Writing is the meanest of jobs. If half the world says "How true!" the other half always says: "Blah!"

HOLLYWOOD. . . —The woman fan who clipped one of Shirley Temple's curls the other day in a department store should be well pleased with herself. As a result of the incident, the little star will be drilled so dear to the hearts of all children—to tour the toy department and put in her letter to Santa Claus.

Shirley Temple's mere appearance in a store causes all business to stop. It was bad enough when people just crowded around and exclaimed. But, last time, when Shirley's mother heard her cry out and turned to see a woman making away with a shipped curl, the situation took on a more serious turn. Fearing that the child will be mauled, the Temples have been driven to the new rule—no more shopping tours for Hollywood's "poor little rich girl."

An attack of influenza has done Claudette Colbert one good turn. Her physician, Dr. Joseph Pressman, has ordered the Paramount star to take a rest, preferably a sea voyage, as soon as she finishes "The Gilded Lily." That was all Claudette has been waiting for. Though still in bed, she is making plans to go to Honolulu and really see the Hawaiian islands. The time she went before, for the De Mille picture, she was sick all the way over, and worked continuously after her arrival. Now, it's going to be different. V. G. Daisy Lukas (the wife of Paul Lukas) along for company, she'll have at least a week to see the sights.

Maybe it's a declaration of independence or something. Evelyn Venable hints that you may be seeing her in a typical movie love scene just any picture now.

"I still have pronounced ideas on the type of parts I'll play," she says. "But if I accept a role that calls for kisses, I'll kiss or be kissed."

I thought you'd like to know.

What Hollywood actor, who was recently jilted, is telling it around at cocktail parties that he may sue his ex-sweetie for money loaned over a period of two years?

As an ex-salesman for an exclusive London tailor, Henry Wilcoxon thought he knew all about fittings. But that was before De Mille cast him as Richard, Coeur de Lion, in "The Crusades."

In this picture, the British actor will have to wear a suit of armor for the better part of four months. The suit will have 50 joints, each of which must work smoothly.

To get the desired effect, Wilcoxon has put in an hour every other day for three weeks. Julianio Arrachea, European armor expert, has superintended the fittings.

When the job is finished, Wilcoxon will have a chic 1197 A. D. model suit of mail.

And great care has been taken to have it just the right year, for there were different styles of armor in 1196 or 1250 A. D. To have erred either way would have been like putting a one-piece bathing suit on a Gibson girl.

KNICK-KNACKS—

The Harmon O. Nelsons (Betty Davis) returned from the east together, so kerpunk goes another movie separation rumor. . . . The world's most persistent admirer is possessed by Gloria Stuart. Five days after she was divorced from Blair Gordon Newell, he wrote from Brooklyn proposing marriage. After Gloria wed Arthur Sheekman, the same gent wrote again, asking her to adopt him. Now, he has written for the third time, and will settle for an autograph picture. . . . Carole Lombard has been having swell times at the Clover club with Director Mitchell Leisen. . . . Norman Foster took a pretty bet on the U. S. C. California game. . . . and Joe E. Brown stole the show between sales at a professional game by taking bows for all film celebrities announced. . . . The W. S. Van Dyke party was Hollywood's noisiest in weeks. Very gay, too. . . . And here's a twosome that will bear watching: Dr. J. W. Dougherty Howe, polo-playing, medical, and Nadine Connor, torch-singer on the air programs.

DID YOU KNOW—
That William Powell delivered the class oration, "A Plea for Benedict Arnold," on his graduation year at Central High school, Kansas City?

Advice to the Love-lorn

To Mr. C. M.—If Mary is the kind of girl you say she is, there's just one answer to your question: Mary her—before some man, with a quicker eye for feminine values, takes her for his own.

Any woman can be good-looking, Mr. C. M., who knows how to handle a powder-puff and lipstick. But the woman is a find indeed, who is a good-looker—for bargains!

For you can't live on a peaches-and-cream complexion, Mr. C. M. You need more solid food for the years and years of married life.

So never smile at Mary because she happens to know the ads by heart. Thank your lucky stars that she does. You'll earn the money, Mr. C. M., but Mary will have to spend it for you. And a wife who knows her advertisements is a joy indeed. It's ten to one she'll save money and make her home a happier place to be.

had been going to say. There were quick footsteps behind them and Ida Campbell appeared, with Spike Winch and Keith Pitts behind her.

Ida's arm went through Earl Harrow's with an instinctive ease. "Oh! Let it go! You're out here!" Ida exclaimed. "No wonder you sneaked outside. Mr. Winch has been telling us the funniest stories, Mr. Harrow."

Kay felt something grow cold within her body or within her mind. Just where it was and what it was she did not know. All she knew was that Ida Campbell never had annoyed her more than at this moment.

The little party on Earl Harrow's yacht broke up soon after two o'clock.

"I'll drive them home, Earl," Spike Winch offered.

Harrow gave him a look of mild, secret amusement that Winch had learned only too well.

"Okay," he said. "I was thinking about the night air and your ton-sils."

"And I'm thinking that by the way you hit that Scotch your own ton-sils must be in a fine state of preservation."

"Heh. Fooled you, pal. Burned them out on French cognac during la guerre."

"Which way?" Harrow asked when he had seated Kay, Ida and Keith Pitts in the car.

"Keith is first," Ida said. "He lives on this side of the river."

"Right."

They started out, Keith and Kay in the rear seat, Ida Campbell having somehow managed to get into the front with Harrow. She's certainly playing for him, Kay told herself.

And for Kay, it was easy to see that Ida really was Idy. A very respectable, really rather stuffy New Jersey family, she had married at twenty the fifty-year-old Clinton Campbell, the cosmetics manufacturer and now, at twenty-seven, she had a aris divorce, a fortune and the big Campbells villa on the ocean front. Undeniably, she had done very well.

Her home, which she shared with her mother and young sister, was a favorite gathering place of Daytona Beach society, during both the tourist season and the summer, and she had only the last year become a director of the exclusive Dunes Club.

A quick consciousness of all these advantages raked Kay Owen as she sat in the rear seat of Harrow's car and studied the back of Ida's blonde head—which, incidentally, was very close to Earl Harrow's shoulder.

When they had dropped Keith Pitts at his apartment, Ida Campbell said quickly, "Kay's next on the itinerary. You can drop her and then go on to my place. I'm really sorry to put you to so much trouble at this hour. Really, I live a frightful distance from the center of town. Down south on the beach. We like it, though. We aren't packed in with everybody."

So that's it, Kay thought, knowing well that it would have been easy for Harrow to have dropped Ida first, then to have gone on west and past her house on the shortest return route. Also, she recalled now that Ida had sent her sister, Joyce, home in the family limousine. Evidently, Ida had foreseen some circumstance such as this. Yes, Ida was a smart girl!

"Wouldn't you like to come up in front?" Harrow asked.

"Thanks no," Kay said, per-versely, "I'm rather tired and back here I can stretch a bit. I've been on the go all day."

In front of Kay's old house on the river—an old, weathered frame place Ross Owen had bought on speculation during the boom, intending to sell or remodel it—Ida Campbell said, "Does Dave Meade still live with you, Kay?"

"Why yes. He's north now."

"I knew I hadn't seen him," Ida turned to Harrow. "Poor Kay," she said, "three of the boys who've stayed at her mother's house have gotten married in the last year. I wouldn't be surprised, Kay, if Dave married Helen before he came back. She's up in Cleveland, too, you know."

"Yes, I know," Kay said. That was malicious of Ida, going to such pains to let Harrow know they kept rooms. Not that she cared.

Harrow stepped out and walked to the porch with her.

"Let me tell you again how much I enjoyed your performance to-night," he said, "and how glad I am you decided to come with us on the boat. I'm sorry your—that Pete couldn't come. Next time, though, eh?"

"Absolutely. And thank you ever so much, Mr. Harrow. Really, I've had a wonderful time. I think your boat is marvelous. I wouldn't have missed it for anything. Good night."

And she started in, half hoping he'd have something else to say. But, of course, he wouldn't. How could he? There was Ida, waiting.

"Good night," he said, and went back to the car, to Ida.

Closing the door softly behind her, Kay bit her lip. It had to happen like this! Ida had to be along. She hadn't had a chance to tell him half what she wanted about her ambitions. And he hadn't had a chance to say any more about helping her and about the temporary secretarial job he had hinted at. Kay shrugged her shoulders and smiled briefly to herself, as she watched the car moved down the drive. Such jobs didn't happen, anyway. That's all they were—hints.

In her room, she looked out upon the river which shone with the silver of the moon. It was a quiet night with no sounds but the lapping of the water on the coquina sea wall and the occasional weird cry of the whippoorwill that inhabited the backyard. Moths flitted vainly against the window screen. Overhead, to the west, the moon still hung low. Such a night to have to come in and sleep!

And when Kay finally did fall asleep she was thinking of Earl Harrow's wise, tired eyes; his wise, tired smile; and his casually combed black hair.

Next morning at breakfast, Kay's mother asked as usual, "Party after the show?"

"Lovely one," Kay said, nodding, and spreading her thin slice of toast with delicious guava jelly.

They were sitting in the breakfast nook, looking out upon the back lawn that sloped down to the river. The water danced brightly in the morning sun and breeze and the date palm by the window rustled cheerfully.

"Where was it?" her mother asked. Her mother always was interested, not nosily as some mothers might be, but with a sisterly curiosity that sprang of comradeship and an inner youthfulness unquenched by years and misfortunes.

"You'll never guess," Kay said. "Martha's?"

"No."

"Keith's?"

"No. You won't guess."

"The Lido."

"No. No, you'd never guess in a million years, darling. Did you see that new big yacht at the dock?"

"That Commander boat? That came in yesterday?"

Kay nodded and grinned. "And did you ever hear of Earl Harrow?" she asked.

"Earl Harrow? Earl Harrow? Not the theatricals?"

Kay nodded. "No one else, Earl Harrow, in person—and you should see him. He saw the show, mother. I nearly died—actually—when I heard he'd been out there in the audience. And he sent his assistant in and said he wanted to meet me!—well . . . And Kay shook her head in bewilderment. "I'd heard of such things in the movies, but not in real life—not in Daytona Beach between seasons, certainly. And never, never, with me."

"And he saw you in the show? Then that's why Bud and I couldn't find you. What did he say? Did he like it?"

Kay laughed at her mother's eagerness.

"You're as giddy as I was," she said. "Yes, he said he liked it. He thought I had possibilities. And he thinks maybe he'll have some work for me."

Her mother blinked. "Not on the stage?" she asked, awed.

"No, darling. No such luck, I'm afraid. He said I ought to study and I told him I was looking for work and couldn't afford to, so he said maybe he'd have a little typing and dictation for me while he was here."

Somehow, her mother's expression had changed. Her face was older now, and sad, and her eyes were on the gently swaying papaya tree in the yard.

"Why, what's the matter, mother?"

"Nothing, dear," Mrs. Owen smiled quickly and looked back at her daughter. "Nothing at all. I was just thinking what a shame it is you can't study."

"Put-tut, darling. I don't mind. It'll all work out sometime." She patted her mother's arm affectionately.

After breakfast Mrs. Owen said, "You must be tired, Kay, after last night, and the show again tonight to face—why don't you go down to the beach?"

"I think I will," Kay said. "Nothing I can do first, though."

"Not a thing. Run along."

EDDINGTON TROJANS

The St. Ann's A. A. gridders will meet the Eddington Trojans on Sunday, November 25. This date was agreed upon last night between the managers of both teams. St. Ann's will play the Fairbrook team this Sunday and on Thanksgiving Day will play the Sellersville Green Jackets at Sellersville.

Arrangements are being made to have a bus transport the spectators to the Sellersville match. Anyone interested can get in touch with any member of St. Ann's Athletic Association. To Study Local History
In Bucks Co. Schools

There are no one teacher high schools. I congratulate you. There are quite a few counties in Pennsylvania which do have such schools, where teachers are trying to do an impossible job.

Today nearly everybody goes to high school first because a high school education is essential, and secondly, because transportation is easier. When I went to high school I drove a horse 14 miles which took me an hour. As far as secondary education is concerned today we have forgotten distinct lines."

Dr. Cressman exhibited a map, dotted with red-topped pins, showing where the out-of-town students attending Doylestown High School live, some of them 14 or 15 miles away.

In the afternoon the directors met with the teachers to hear the presentation of the Pennsylvania State Educational Association's program which was outlined by Dr. Carmon Ross, president of the Edinboro State Teachers' College.

along Route 213 to Route 113 in Langhorne Borough.

Here is located the historic Middletown Friends Meeting House, and the old Richardson House (built in 1738) where General Lafayette had his wounds dressed after the Battle of Brandywine and also where General Washington housed a part of his troops after the Battle of Trenton.

At Newtown are to be found many old and historic buildings, Newtown Presbyterian Church (where several Hessians were kept prisoners after the Battle of Trenton), and the Newtown Presbyterian Cemetery (where 22 Revolutionary War soldiers are buried).

Thence left along Route 532 straight ahead along Route 09042, through Spring Garden and Bucks County, junction of Poor House Road (Route 09046), at Jacksonville Road.

Thence straight ahead along Route 09046, across the railroad and bridge over Little Neshaminy Creek to Route 09047, thence right, along Route 09047 to Rushland, left along Route 09048, past Rush Valley Apple Orchards, through Mozart and Worthington Corners to Furlong at Route 263.

Thence right, along Route 263, left along Route 09063 to Mechanics Valley, left, along Route 113 past a stone marker erected by the Daughters of the American Revolution to commemorate the encampment of General George Washington while en route from Valley Forge, to Mowmouth, N. J., night of June 19, 1778, near the borough line of Doylestown, thence to State and Main streets.

The terrain along this tour is very attractive and changeable, pretty valleys, wooded hills, flat farm truck lands and beautiful residential villages. Views of fascinating, rolling country can be seen for miles around.

Schools Should Meet New

meet, not the problems of twenty-five years ago, but the problems of tomorrow."

Dr. Rule has called upon Pennsylvania school people and interested citizens to make proposals for a school recovery program that can be presented at the coming 1935 session of the Legislature.

Kidnap Gang Roundup Told at Glance

This dramatic picture tells at a glance how Darien, Conn., police trapped three of four men accused of trying to abduct 12-year-old Robert Westheim, son of travel agency executive. Police who hid in house three days and nights after receipt of threats are guarding the captives, members of a Providence gang.

Mighty Minnesota Menace

—By BURNLEY—

NO football team in the country can match the thundering Norsemen of Minnesota when it comes to sheer power. Bernie Bierman's Gopher stalwarts can generate an offensive drive that is simply devastating—the nearest thing to the "irresistible force" of scientific theory that we have on the gridiron today.

The crushing steam roller from the North is driven onward by its truly herculean manpower, but the Gophers' success cannot be attributed to brawn alone. At least three Minnesotans are exceedingly talented gridiron performers of all-American stature, and the brilliant work of this trio—Lund, Larsen and Kostka—has been a potent factor in inspiring their sometimes lethargic Scandinavian teammates.

Minnesota mastodons need to be thoroughly aroused before they can turn on the power of which they are capable. For three periods, Pittsburgh completely stopped the Viking offense, then the Gopher giants finally awoke to the fact that they were losing the game and proceeded to unleash a bone-crushing attack that crumpled the Panthers' defenses like tissue paper.

Star Kostka, the new Hammer of the North, and worthy successor to Joesting and Nagurski, is perhaps the most spectacular of the Gopher stars, but wise football men will tell you that the Iron Horse, Pug Lund, is the real Minnesota mainstay.

This hard-working backfield ace is not a very colorful performer, and he doesn't often break loose on spectacular runs, but his steadiness and dependability make him more valuable to a team than most of the more spectacular climax runners.

Lund's fighting spirit, his gameness and his durability are proverbial on the Minnesota campus. The stories of how he played a full game with a broken finger; of the time he refused to call time out despite the excruciating pain of a broken tooth; for fear Bierman would take him out, and many similar tales give one some idea of this blond giant's flaming courage.

Minnesota's Iron Horse has been guilty of more fumbles than usual this year, and this is probably due to the amputation of an infected finger last summer. However, this minor fault isn't likely to keep him from gaining a place on many of the so-called all-American lists that will be swamping us shortly.
